

I was alarmed to see that the FCC might pre-empt state telephone privacy laws in favor of a lower national standard. Do people no longer have rights? They can be called endlessly in their homes by strangers wanting to sell them things in the few peaceful hours of the day? Do you want to make people crazy? I do not do business with anyone who contacts me at home. I don't care if they are trying to give me money. I will hang up on them. This is very upsetting. E-mail is different. One can choose to read info. The telephone is very invasive. 1.18 million Hoosiers are 98% pleased participating in the current telephone privacy law. How can the FCC disregard this? We are not the land of the free, but rather a country where we are victims of relentless profiteering predators.
